Trump Under Fire: Michael Wolff in Conversation with Matthew d'Ancona

Praise for Michael Wolff

"A deliciously catty look inside the White House, full of wicked anecdotes and gossipy gold. It's like sitting in a hairdresser's listening to a fabulously indiscreet conversation beside you. It's The Kardashians: White House edition (Harriet Alexander Telegraph)

"Once again, the dirt is abundant. Donald Trump insults everyone in his orbit, repeatedly, viciously, and - always privately - they return the favor ... Siege is overflowing with such titillating material, which is sure to make it another tour de force for the Trump resistance" (Vanity Fair)

"Bannon's frequently shrewd observations make it clear why Wolff finds him irresistible. The author is mostly interested in Trump's psychology. He is adept at documenting the president's lunacy, and Bannon is frequently an able fellow shrink" (Washington Post)

Utterly gripping (GQ)

Rich in psychological insights (Peter Conrad Observer)

Michael Wolff has unearthed a mass of damning material about Donald Trump . . . Siege is filled with delicious gossip (Sarah Baxter Sunday Times)

Michael Wolff is the author of Fire and Fury, the number one Sunday Times and New York Times bestseller that for the first time told the inside story of the Trump White House. He has received numerous awards for his work, including two National Magazine Awards. The author of seven previous books, he has been a regular columnist for Vanity Fair, New York, The Hollywood Reporter, British GQ, and other magazines and newspapers.

Matthew d'Ancona is an editor at Tortoise Media and an award-winning columnist. He writes for The Guardian, London Evening Standard and GQ. He was previously editor of The Spectator and founding editor-in-chief of Drugstore Culture. His most recent book, Post-Truth: The New War on Truth and How to Fight Back, received global acclaim.

In this live In Conversation event, Melinda will introduce us to the women she's met during years of travel, humanitarian work and extensive research. She will share stories from her new book The Moment of Lift: How Empowering Women Changes the World: stories that are brutally honest, gut-wrenching, inspiring and triumphant. They show us how, time and time again, empowered women rise up and bring their families and communities with them.

Melinda will also share her own personal journey to achieving equality in her marriage, finding her voice and becoming an advocate for women and girls. She will explain how the women she has met have called her to action. And at this critical moment, she will call us to action too — urging us to drive progress in our homes, workplaces and communities.

This conversation will fill your heart with hope and the determination to empower yourself and others. It will also ignite your sense of urgency, leaving you convinced that equality can't wait.

WHAT THEY SAY

'In her book, Melinda tells the stories of the inspiring people she's met through her work all over the world, digs into the data, and powerfully illustrates issues that need our attention — from child marriage to gender inequity in the workplace.' — President Barack Obama

'Melinda Gates has spent many years working with women around the world. This book is an urgent manifesto for an equal society where women are valued and recognized in all spheres of life. Most of all, it is a call for unity, inclusion and connection. We need this message more than ever.' — Malala Yousafzai

'The Moment of Lift is an urgent call to courage. It changed how I think about myself, my family, my work, and what's possible in the world. Melinda weaves together vulnerable, brave storytelling and compelling data to make this one of those rare books that you carry in your heart and mind long after the last page.' — Brené Brown, Ph.D., author of New York Times #1 bestseller Dare to Lead

'This book is a beautiful and concise mission statement on what we need to do to move society forward- continue to empower women. At every level and in all places women are truly the bedrock supporting their communities.' — Trevor Noah

‘Melinda Gates’s book is a lesson in listening. A powerful, poignant, and ultimately humble call to arms.’ — Tara Westover, author of Educated Melinda French Gates is a philanthropist, businesswoman, and global advocate for women and girls.

As the co-chair of the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, Melinda sets the direction and priorities of the world’s largest philanthropy. She is also the founder of Pivotal Ventures, an investment and incubation company working to drive social progress for women and families in the United States. Melinda's first book, The Moment of Lift, was published in the UK April 2019 by Bluebird, part of Pan Macmillan.

The Computational Structure of Mental Representation

Joscha Bach
joscha.bach@hu-berlin.de

Berlin, February 26th, 2013

Now is the time for starting a new Artificial Intelligence initiative.

What is the mind?
–this is arguably the most interesting question that our species can ask itself.

Last month, a grand proposal by Barack Obama made headlines everywhere in the world: He suggested a large-scale initiative to create a detailed map of the activity of the human brain, at the level of individual neurons. This idea is quite similar to (and likely inspired by) Henry Markram's Blue Brain project in Lausanne, which recently won a 1.5Bn grant from the European Union. While this is an interesting project in its own right, it will not address the key question of cognitive science:
What is the mind? What are the building blocks and fundamental operations of thinking and perception?

Here, I would like to suggest the instigation of a project that is at once more ambitious, more narrowly targeted, and likely to yield more profound theoretical, practical and cultural insights than the Brain Activity Mapping initiative: The study of the computational structure of mental representation.

Mental representation, not neurons will inform the core our understanding of cognition.

Cognition is incidentally enabled by human nervous systems, but in its nature, it is not a chemical, biological or physiological phenomenon. Instead, cognitive systems are a class of information processing systems, thinking is a set of certain, functionally identifiable operations, over certain, functionally identifiable types of representations, and with respect to a set of problems and properties given by certain environments.

Thus, the Structure of Mental Representation initiative should focus on mental content, with all its dynamic, relational, conceptual, and linguistic elements, and it's grounding in perception and interaction.

The study of mental representations requires a new scientific discipline

Unraveling mental representations will be an interdisciplinary effort among several cognitive sciences, but distinct from the disciplines that we find now:

The project will differ from linguistics, for instance, in similar way as geography differs from plate tectonics. Where linguists study the intrinsic 'geography' of languages, and the structural commonalities among them, mental representations uncover the underlying dynamics that produce natural languages (as the solutions to the problem of translating between hierarchical, distributed, associative, ambiguous representations and the discrete strings of symbols that we use as a means of exchanging and organizing ideas).

Integrating concepts from linguistics, cognitive psychology and neuroscience within the methodological framework of constructionist Artificial Intelligence

Mental representations lie outside the domain of neuroscience, which mostly focuses on material descriptions of the function of the underlying substrate. They cannot be studied well within contemporary psychology, which favors an experimentalist, quantitative approach, where we need to address qualitative questions by constructing working, implementable systems. And needless to say, the study of mental representations is currently not well represented in Artificial Intelligence research, which does provide a productive methodology, but has mostly turned towards applications and narrow AI solutions.

A new common ground between AI and cognitive science researchers

Despite the lack of a common methodological ground between the cognitive sciences, we can now observe a growing consensus on how to approach the problem of modeling the mind, and its representational apparatus. During the last decade, a number of initiatives have sprung up within AI, psychology and cognitive science, each with journals, workshops and conference series, and a large personal overlap among each community. Examples include Artificial General Intelligence (AGI), Biologically Inspired Cognitive Architectures (BICA), Cognitive Systems, and Cognitive Modeling (ICCM). Among those groups, there is an emerging consensus on several paradigms:

- Integrated architectures of cognition. We need to study whole, working systems, both for the purpose of comparison between approaches, but mainly, because cognition is not the product of the activity of individual modular functions, but of the interaction between them.
- Universal representations. Representations must provide both distributed and localist aspects, to enable neural learning, information retrieval via spreading activation, as well as symbolic processing (language and planning).
- Perceptual grounding. Representations should be grounded in an environmental interaction context, using a bottom-up/top-down perception paradigm, to allow for open-ended autonomous learning and language acquisition.

- Integration of perception and action. Environmental interaction is (at least partially) a control process that requires a modeling of the relationship between sensory data and operations performed by the system.
- (Semi-) Universal problem solving, enabling paradigms of learning, planning, reasoning, analogies, language acquisition and reflection.
- A structured memory, including provisions for a world/situation model, a protocol of environmental interactions, procedural memory, declarative and typological abstractions, a model of self, and a 'mental stage', to facilitate anticipation and planning.
- Decision making and motivational mechanisms, to address both autonomous, goal-directed cognition in complex, open domains, and the genesis of goals and intentions.
- The direction and modulation of attention, and the emergence of emotion and affect, which are configurational aspects of cognition that either reflect the allocation of cognitive resources, or structure social interaction.

Constraints for Mental Representations

Based on the emergent paradigm of a new generation of cognitive architectures, we can think about mental representations in a new and productive way. More specifically, we know that mental representations include perceptual and propositional/conceptual content and we are aware of many constraints. Mental representations must

- Offer support for both connectionist and symbolic processing (including compositionality and grammatical structures), with the latter one being a special case of the former
- Possess a hierarchical structure, bottoming out in sensory perception
- Cover prototypes, individuals and abstractions
- Include perceptual and relational features, objects, situations, and episodic knowledge
- Allow simulation of dynamic processes
- Solve the bridge problem between fuzzy associative hierarchies and the discrete symbol strings of natural language

Operations on these representations include reinforcement learning and classification, perceptual top-down/bottom-up processing, abstraction, analogy formation, associative and syllogistic reasoning, planning, reflection, anticipation and several modes of reorganization.

Creating a scientific community

The task of the Structure of Mental Representation initiative will at first consist in the creation of a large and competitive community, built around a set of benchmark problems.

I suggest picking a set of problems that covers most of the above architectural requirements: the comprehension of dynamic visual sequences (movies) and narratives. The evaluation of comprehension may focus both on a discourse level (asking the system general and specific questions about the consumed visuals or narratives) and directly, by producing dynamic renderings and depictions of knowledge represented within the system. At least on the discourse level, a direct comparison to the functional properties of child performance at different cognitive stages is possible.

The Comprehension Challenge

Turning the benchmark task into a regular competition allows a direct comparison between models, and offers a strong incentive for exchange of solutions among research groups. The need to for broad solutions with given material and intellectual resources will enforce a higher degree of the reuse of code and ideas than we currently see in AI architectures (outside of robotic soccer, where such competitions have turned out to be highly successful).

By structuring the comprehension tasks into different levels and sub-domains (such as basic language acquisition tasks, grammar, perceptual and logical tasks, social reasoning/theory of mind, affective evaluation, constructive problem solving, use of analogies and metaphor etc.), we can formulate consistent long-term goals and realistic short-term problems.

The Formation of a Pilot Team

To pull the Structure of Mental Representation initiative off the ground, we will need to create a pilot team, which is the object of this proposal. The pilot team has the following tasks:

- Bring a critically sized group of people together, with a well-defined set of shared goals
- Formulate an initial set of hypotheses
- Bring these in the context of an existing or hypothetical cognitive architecture, so specifications can be derived

- Build an initial software infrastructure for testing benchmark problems, and to create a common methodological ground

Composition of a pilot team

The pilot team should consist of a scientific board, including a mutually compatible sub-set of contemporary thinkers in the field. Its core should consist of a new generation of researchers that have the resources and impetus to work full-time on the design, implementation and publication of the project's infrastructure. The initial team size should not be large, but agile and effective (I would suggest about five permanent researchers, about the same number of dedicated software developers, and 2–3 slots for visiting scientists at a time).

The initial duration should be about 2.5 years, followed be an evaluation, and a possible continuation of similar length.

Possible candidates for the scientific board include (in no particular order) Paul Rosenbloom (who worked with Alan Newell on the cognitive architecture Soar, and now started a new architecture), John Sowa (well-known for his groundbreaking work in semantic networks), Ben Goertzel (designer of the cognitive architecture OpenCog), Luc Steels (an AI researcher studying the emergence of natural language in communities of software agents), Jerome Feldman (who devised building blocks for a Neural Theory of Language), Stephen Pinker (who thought much about the relationship between language and mental representation), Stephen Kosslyn (an expert on the psychology of mental representation), Daniel Dennet, Cristiano Castelfranchi (an AI researcher specializing on mental representations of intentions and social context), and many others.

The project should start out with a number of kickoff meetings to invite the interaction between suitable candidates, and the formation of a core group. The eventual pilot team could be located in many possible places, however, the project should be able to draw on the vicinity of academic and other infrastructure, and the influence of a creative environment.

About me (Joscha Bach):

Driven by an interest to learn hot the mind works, I studied philosophy and psychology, graduated in computer science/artificial intelligence, lead several small academic research groups, built the cognitive architecture MicroPsi and obtained a PhD in cognitive science. I co-founded a couple of startup companies in Berlin, but turned back towards academia to contribute to the question of how to build a mind.

AIPAC SPEECH 2013 – MINISTER OF DEFENSE - EHUD BARAK

- Thank you for such a warm welcome.
- What an indescribable feeling to be surrounded by so many true friends in the capital of the world's greatest democracy.
- Members of the Administration, Members of Congress, distinguished ambassadors, especially our ambassador Michael Oren…. Michael, Rosey, Bob, David, Howard and Richard, AIPAC members… older and young…
- Good evening to you all.
- It is your toil and your graft – your unwavering support – that keep us safe.
- I have six humble words for all of you: Thank you, thank you, thank you.
- I would like to express my personal appreciation to President Obama and Secretary Panetta for their resolute backing of Israel.

- History will surely record your immeasurable contribution to the strength of Israel, and the maintenance of the truly special relationship between our peoples.
- On behalf of the people of Israel, I wish Secretary Hagel all the best in his new role.
- As Secretary of Defense he will, no doubt, serve his country with the same pride and honor with which he served, both on the battlefield and in Congress.
- It is great to see so many young activists here. Thank you for your energetic commitment to Israel!
- A commitment which is so lucidly dictated by the head… yet so deeply underpinned by the heart…
- Keep it up – you are the future!

- It is thanks to the rock solid US-Israel relationship, alongside the devotion of the young men and women of the IDF, that our capacity to defend ourselves, has been guaranteed for years to come!
- With US support, combined with the ingenuity of our scientists; Israel finds itself at the cutting edge of missile defense technology.
- The 'Iron Dome' recently intercepted over 400 incoming terrorist rockets. Practically – this is like hitting a bullet… with a bullet!
- Just last week, we – the US and Israel – conducted a successful exo-atmospheric test of the Arrow 3 interceptor.
- The State of Israel simply would not be the strong island of stability it is, without one crucial constant.
- You! The United States of America. Its people. Its leadership. Its Congress. Its Jewish community.

- It is no secret, and I'll repeat it again, that we live in a tough neighborhood, where there is no mercy for the weak. And no second chance for those who cannot defend themselves.

- Israel is the strongest country in the region and the only genuinely open democracy.

- An unprecedented geopolitical earthquake in the last three years has shattered the generations' old regional order.

- There are two clear lessons and one insight which I have drawn from this period:

- # 1: Be modest with predictions……. especially about the future! Take Egypt as an example; Mubarak was unable to predict it… who did? Who thinks he could?

- #2: When friends tell me: Don't worry… If worse comes to worst … the world will step forward and act!

- My answer is: Do not take this for granted.
- Look at Syria – you don't need classified intelligence; it's on your screens. Assad's jet fighters, tanks and artillery are slaughtering his own citizens. Over 70,000 Syrians killed.
- Yet still… there is no sense of direction and no political will to act.
- There is an extremely relevant lesson here… especially for all of us in Israel.
- And an insight…
- Many believe that the root cause for all the problems in the Middle East… is our inability to solve the conflict with the Palestinians.
- Well, I say… That's not true!
- Recent developments in the Middle East have been far beyond our control… and independent of our deeds.
- Even if a peace agreement with the Palestinians had been signed and sealed a long time ago:

    - The Muslim Brotherhood would still have come to power in Egypt
    - Syria would still be mired in a bloody civil war
    - And Iran would still be pursuing nuclear capabilities and a hegemonic role in the Gulf

- And ladies and gentlemen,
- It is Iran's pursuit of nuclear capabilities which is the greatest challenge facing Israel, the region and the world today…
- A nuclear Iran spells the end of any conceivable non-proliferation regime.
- Saudi Arabia, Turkey and later Egypt will follow suit. In the future, even terrorist groups may try.
- Diplomatic efforts continue. Sanctions are unprecedented and hurting, but frankly – while exhausting all diplomatic means is understandable – I do not believe it will lead to a “moment of truth”, where the Ayatollahs will give up their nuclear aspirations.

- Therefore, all options must remain on the table.

- We have stated this time and again.

- And we expect all those who say it… to mean it…

- Ladies and gentlemen… We mean it.

- And let me repeat it: we… mean it.

- A nuclear Iran is the most imminent and acute danger to the stability of the entire region. But it is not the only one:
- Radical Islamist terror is spreading rapidly.
- And the accumulation of missiles and rockets will necessitate regional missile defense.

- So what is to be done?
- It is an interregnum right now in Israel, and the new Netanyahu government will have to shape its approach.
- But allow me, just before I leave my post, to share with you my positions:
- The Middle East is a Gestalt – everything depends on everything else.
- Facing this array of threats, we have to:
- Firstly, start building a 'Regional Security Framework'…

- This should be built around the common challenges of radical Islamist terror, border security, missile defense… and of course, Iran.
- And being led by the United States, it could provide a variety of synergies for all its regional participants.
- Secondly, we need a daring peace initiative vis-à-vis the Palestinians.
- A two-state solution is the only viable long-term solution.
- It is a compelling imperative for us, in order to secure our identity and our future as a Jewish and democratic state; it's not a favor for the Palestinians…
- Believe me, I tried hard as Prime Minister, together with President Clinton. So I know, from personal experience, that the Palestinians are not easy partners for peace.
- Prime Minister Netanyahu has taken courageous steps, to renew the process including an unprecedented settlement freeze.

- But still – from the Palestinian side… no proper response.
- They clearly bear most of the responsibility for past failures.
- And I know, a fully fledged agreement is probably not feasible today, But if this is the case – and only a sincere effort can determine this – we have to try and achieve a reasonable, fair, interim agreement.
- I strongly believe this is possible, while guaranteeing all our security and vital interests.
- But if even an interim agreement is unobtainable, then we should consider unilateral steps, in order to place a wedge on this extremely dangerous slippery slope towards a binational state.
- It involves demarcating a line within the land of Israel… Within which we will have the settlement blocs and a solid Jewish majority for generations to come.

- As well as setting security arrangements, and a solid Israeli, long-term military presence along the River Jordan.
- Rest assured… our security should not – and will not – be compromised under any of these alternatives.
- Tough decisions must be taken; but it is possible.
- And as our sages teach us: "If not now… when?"

- I strongly believe that this intertwined strategic triangle:
- First, The Regional Security Framework
- Second, a reinvigorated political process with the Palestinians…
- And third: tackling Iran.
- This triangle, is the most effective approach to deal with the challenges on our horizon.

- Israel, has also been experiencing its own tremors of change.
- In the summer of 2011, the people of Israel took to the streets… demanding a more equal allocation of the burden.
- Just last month, 53 new, fresh members of the Knesset were sworn in, about half the serving members of Knesset … (Present company included!)… were out.
- That is what I call democracy in action.
- A democracy I am proud of.
- A democracy you can be proud of.
- I am confident that Prime Minister Netanyahu will lead his new government with the same dedication and responsibility which he led the last.

- Ladies and gentlemen,

- I was born 71 years ago, at the height of World War II; the Nazi crematoria in Europe were working day and night.
- And now… in 2013, I am ending my tenure as the Minister of Defense of a strong, independent Jewish state.
- Look at what we – as a nation – have achieved… Who would have believed it then?
    - Today we have an agile and adaptive high-tech and export oriented economy.
    - A start-up culture flourishes on an eruption of talent and an underlying entrepreneurial spirit.

- I am optimistic, and my vision for Israel is clear:
- A strong, self-confident, thriving Jewish, democratic state, living in peace and security with its neighbors.
- An exemplary state and world leader in science, technology, education and culture.

- A country in which our children will want to live, and your children will be proud of.

- Ladies and gentlemen,
- We are at a decisive juncture in our history…
- As President Kennedy noted during the Cuban Missile Crisis:
    - "The path we have chosen for the present is full of hazards, as all paths are. But it is the one most consistent with our character and courage as a nation…"
- I believe we possess the character and courage as a nation to make those tough decisions for the future, peace and security of the State of Israel.
- Please allow me to end with the millennia old blessing:
    - השם עוז לעמו ייתן, השם יברך את עמו בשלום
- May the Lord bestow his people with courage; may the Lord bless his people with peace.

- Thank you…

Scientists create human embryos to make stem cells

For the first time, scientists have created human embryos that are genetic copies of living people and used them to make stem cells — a feat that paves the way for treating a range of diseases with personalized body tissues but also ignites fears of human cloning.

If replicated in other labs, the methods detailed Wednesday in the journal Cell would allow researchers to fashion human embryonic stem cells that are custom-made for patients with Alzheimer's disease, diabetes and other health problems.

Theoretically capable of reproducing themselves indefinitely, these stem cells could be used to grow replacements for a wide variety of diseased cells — those of the blood, skin, heart, brain, muscles, nerves and more — that would not risk rejection by the patient's immune system.

The report also raises the specter that, with a high-quality donor egg, a bit of skin, some careful tending in a lab and the womb of a willing surrogate, humans have cracked the biological secret to reproducing themselves.

That is an objective American scientists have squarely renounced as unethical and scientifically irresponsible. At the same time, most acknowledge that such "reproductive cloning" will one day prove too tempting to resist.

In the hope that other researchers will validate and extend their results, the scientists at Oregon Health & Science University provided an exceptionally detailed account of their techniques. For anyone with a well-equipped fertility lab, the comprehensive guide could also be a useful handbook for cloning a baby.

OHSU cell biologist Shoukhrat Mitalipov led a team of 23 scientists who methodically culled the lessons learned from stem cell research on amphibians, mice and rhesus monkeys — as well as from the abundant failures of others in the field. They devised a welter of new techniques to use the DNA of a fully formed skin cell in its most primitive embryonic form.

The approach they used — called somatic cell nuclear transfer — effectively strips an egg of its chromosomes and packs it instead with DNA from a donor.

Nurtured by a stew of nourishing chemicals and zapped with two jolts of electrical current, many of the eggs began to divide and grew for five to six days. At that point, the embryos had 64 to 200 cells, including a dense inner cell mass from which stem cells were extracted.

In past efforts to coax such an assemblage of components to life, researchers have burned through dozens of donor eggs without getting any embryos even to the 16-cell stage at which stem cells become a remote possibility.

This time, the researchers said their methods were so efficient that they could create at least one embryonic stem cell line from each batch of eggs donated by 10 female volunteers. In one case, a single donor produced eight eggs of such exceptional quality that researchers were able to derive four embryonic stem cell lines.

The volunteers, between the ages of 23 and 31, donated their eggs anonymously and were "financially compensated for the time, effort, discomfort and inconvenience associated with the donation process," the study authors wrote.

The success of the experiments rekindled debate among bioethicists, who have long anticipated that human cloning would become a reality.

In 2002, a commission of bioethicists established by then-President George W. Bush unanimously urged a ban on reproductive cloning. But the panel was deeply divided about the propriety of "therapeutic cloning" for research and medical treatment.

Though 13 states have passed laws banning reproductive cloning, the United States is one of just a few industrialized countries that has not prohibited the practice. Seven states also have banned therapeutic cloning. Oregon is not one of them.

The OHSU team's success underscores the urgent need for federal rules that spell out consistent national limits on therapeutic cloning and put a clear ban on the technology's use in fertility clinics, said Johns Hopkins University bioethicist Jeffrey Kahn.

Researchers are also likely to step up their demand for donated eggs so they can conduct similar experiments. That lends urgency to the need for standardized practices for compensating women who donate their eggs. Some states, including California, have set strict limits on such payments, while others have allowed a market for donated eggs to flourish unregulated, Kahn added.

Among the methodological innovations outlined in the Cell paper was a trick that stem cell scientist Michael D. West, who was not involved in the study, dubbed "the Starbucks effect."

The OHSU team added caffeine to the growth medium that nourished the eggs after they were stripped of their original DNA and awaited the new DNA from a skin cell. Unlike its stimulating effect on coffee-drinkers, the caffeine chemically slowed the rush to divide and grow that had doomed earlier efforts.

The OHSU scientists also studied which batches of donated eggs were most likely to thrive and survive long enough to produce stem cells. Finding that eggs fared best when they were part of a medium-sized harvest, the researchers fine-tuned their regimen of egg-stimulating drugs so that more of the women produced about 10 eggs per cycle.

In all, the researchers produced six lines of embryonic stem cells from six separate embryos, said OHSU infertility specialist Dr. Paula Amato, one of the paper's authors.

Four of them contained the nuclear DNA of a single donor whose skin cells were purchased from a commercial lab, and a fifth came from a separate donor whose cells were bought the same way.

The sixth donor was a patient with Leigh syndrome, a genetic disorder that results in severe and mostly fatal neurological degeneration in a child's first years of life.

The embryonic stem cell lines faithfully reproduced the nuclear DNA of the person who contributed the skin cell. The expectation is that when cells or tissues made from these stem cells are transplanted into that person, they will slip past his or her immune system unnoticed.

The stem cells showed "no gross chromosomal abnormalities," the authors wrote, and appeared every bit as capable of differentiating into a variety of cell types as embryonic stem cells made the old-fashioned way, from excess embryos obtained from fertility clinics.

"This is extremely important," Dr. Irving Weissman, a stem cell researcher at Stanford University, said of the new results.

Stem cell researcher Dr. Robert Lanza echoed that praise, calling the OHSU team's work "a major scientific achievement."

Lanza, the chief scientific officer of Advanced Cell Technology Inc., said it remained to be seen whether embryonic stem cells generated this way were more useful for studying and treating diseases than stem cells created by reprogramming adult cells to an embryonic state.

The method for creating such induced pluripotent stem cells, or iPS cells, was recognized with a Nobel Prize last year.

But there are lingering questions about whether iPS cells are safe for patients. Scientists use a cancer-causing virus to reprogram the cells, raising concerns that they could cause tumors in patients. And in 2011, when scientists at UC San Diego created iPS cells and reintroduced them into donor mice, the animals' immune systems rejected them.

"Some experts are now saying that somatic cell nuclear transfer may be the only way to truly reprogram cells," Lanza said.

Obama nominee Penny Pritzker's $80 million mistake
President Obama's billionaire nominee to head the Commerce Department, Penny Prizker, understated her income by $80 million.
Emily Heil

Hey, these things happen: Penny Pritzker, President Obama's nominee to lead the Commerce Department, understated her income by some $80 million and had to file a correction to her government-filed disclosures, Bloomberg is reporting.

That might sound like a lot of money, but it's all relative. Pritzker, whose family founded the Hyatt hotel chain, is worth about $1.5 billion. So it's easy to see how a few million – or 80 – could go missing.

Maybe she left it in the other purse?

A spokeswoman told Bloomberg that the $80 million was "a substantial amount" and that Pritzker's advisers corrected the error as soon as they realized it.

Per Bloomberg: "Documents released last week show Pritzker received $32.2 million for a decade's worth of consulting on the restructuring of domestic trusts," but new filings indicated she made at least $80 million more than that.

BREAKING NEWS

Summers withdraws from Fed race

Lawrence Summers has taken himself out of the running to be the next chair of the Federal Reserve, withdrawing his name after opposition from key Democratic senators indicated they would oppose his nomination.

Mr Summers, a former Treasury Secretary and senior economic adviser to Barack Obama in his first term, galvanised opposition among left-of-centre Democrats who painted him as symbol of the wrongs of financial deregulation.

Absolutely. 23rd is great. I teach my seminar that day at 1 but could tape in the morning or after class--in my office (very private), or at the Harvardx studios (less) or in the Woodberry poetry room (the nicest place). . If Woody wanted, we could bring some students into the taping or just do the two of us...

Woody is absolutely welcome to come to the seminar, of course

John McCain, Tony Kushner, Al Gore have all signed on the last 2 days...crazy

Jeffrey,
For taping in Cambridge? For breakfast and taping at my house. Depends on what woody is up for. My ideal would be a 1/2 hour-40 minute conversation, but we could do a quick taping in 15 minutes ...my team can be ready

And , just to remind,could also come to do taping in ny on 24th because I'm coming to New York the evening of 23rd for a YIVO event--to which you would both be most welcome I'm sure (YIVO is the largest collection of materials from Jewish Eastern Europe)

It was not easy as people from LifeBall are very difficult. But I go it (they even now approved you - they needed to do a background check believe it or not! – as on that dinner will be president of Austria, Clinton etc) for two tickets – for you and your guest for a price that you do not need to buy a table (as they do not sell individual seats).
Guy below is a good friend and he is a CEO of amFAR (amFAR has a joined dinner) – so he helped.

The nice thing about these tickets is that they are the most VIP. It includes reception, dinner, gala and after all party access.
I have the same ones (through Bill).
I also got two additional for you but it turns out that they are not the same level so I reached to Kevin for help.

The price is 2,500Euro per ticket (this is very reduced price as I think the regular one for this is 15K and it is hard to get it). They will need an email from someone from your office and name a your guest asap.

The plan for for Vienna I am sending you with my next email!

Here is the information sheet for Jeffrey to buy tickets. Tell him to use my name and the name of Magdalena Schuster on the email below. They've already approved him to buy tickets to Lifeball and the Gala dinner which happens right before the ball. I hope you guys are all planning to attend the dinner as well. You can tell your friend Jeffrey that he should buy the Mini car for me as a thank you. =)

I'm getting in to Vienna on Friday afternoon. Let's get together on Friday night.

See you soon,

LIFE BALL MINI BY FRANCA SOZZANI
LIFE BALL MINI BY FRANCA SOZZANI

Franca Sozzani, Chefredakteurin der italienischen VOGUE und UN-Sonderbotschafterin von „Fashion 4 Development“, beschreibt ihre Inspiration wie folgt: “I thought at MINI as a beautiful woman who put a scarf on her head when she drives a Roadster!”

Die Kombination aus Flora und Mannequins auf modisch schickem Deepest Purple Matt-Lack im Exterieur ergibt eine einzigartige Komposition aus Mode und zeitgenössischen Printmotiven. Die aufwendige Dachgestaltung aus verschiedensten Verarbeitungsweisen der Blumenmuster bildet das Highlight des diesjährigen Life Ball MINIs. Das Interieur besticht durch feinste Materialien und einer extravaganten Sitzgestaltung.

Palm House Hotel, Related Companies Stephen Ross600

An affiliate of the Related Companies has emerged as the initial bidder for the Palm House Hotel as the failed condo-hotel project heads to a bankruptcy auction.

The stalking horse bidder, RREF II PALM HOUSE LLC, has the same address as Related Companies in New York and is led by Related Companies Managing Principal Justin Metz, according to a filing in U.S. Bankruptcy Court. The company is offering $32 million for the property, which will set the floor price for a bankruptcy auction scheduled for next month. Bids at the auction will start at $32.5 million.

The 79-unit condo-hotel project on Palm Beach Island stalled in 2014 and its former developer now faces allegations of fraud by the Securities and Exchange Commission and a group of EB-5 investors. In August, the property filed for bankruptcy under its court appointed receiver with creditors claims totaling $115 million.

Cushman & Wakefield's Robert Given, Errol Blumer, Michael Mulkern and Robert Kaplan are the exclusive marketing advisers for the property. The auction is scheduled for 10 a.m. on November 16, 2018 in West Palm Beach.

Given said he expects the property to sell for up to $40 million and it could be the last opportunity for a developer to own a hotel in the wealthy enclave of Palm Beach. He said the next owner will likely not redevelop the property. Instead, the best option would be to continue renovating the existing project which could take more than a year to complete, Given said. By auctioning the project through a bankruptcy sale, it will be offered free and clear from any liens. The bankruptcy also means that the new owner will not have any responsibility for the issues stemming from EB-5 investors who had invested in the property.

The 82,648-square-foot project was first developed in 1961 and expanded in 1981. The property was set to be renovated by a group led by developer Robert Matthews.

Matthews then raised $44 million from EB-5 investors, according to a complaint by the Securities and Exchange Commission. EB-5 is a federal program that allows foreign investors the chance to gain a green card if they invest at least $500,000 into certain projects that create at least 10 jobs.

The SEC's complaint said, however, that much of this money was misallocated to pay for Matthews' personal expenses. Some of the funds allegedly went to pay for Mathews' Connecticut home, his 151-foot mega yacht, as well as to save his Palm Beach mansion from foreclosure, according to the complaint.

In a separate lawsuit filed by a group of EB-5 investors, the development group claimed that famous celebrities and politicians such as Bill Clinton, Donald Trump, Celine Dion and Bill Koch – would serve on the Palm House's advisory board when, in fact, they did not.

Related Companies, led by Miami Dolphins owner Stephen Ross, developed CityPlace West Palm Beach. The company is also proposing to build a 25-story office project called One Flagler in downtown West Palm Beach.

Call to Action!

The impact of funding decline on female empowerment through the FC2 female condom and the increase of HIV/AIDS

Facts

36.7 million People living with HIV/AIDS worldwide 2015	1.1 million People died of AIDS-related illnesses worldwide 2015
1 in 25 Adults Are living with HIV in Sub Saharan Africa	70% Of people living with HIV worldwide are found in Sub-Saharan Africa
51% are women More than half of people living with HIV/AIDS are women

Since the beginning of the epidemic, more than 70 million people have been infected with the HIV virus and about 35 million people have died of HIV. Globally, 36.7 million [34.0–39.8 million] people were living with HIV at the end of 2015. An estimated 0.8% [0.7-0.9%] of adults aged 15–49 years worldwide are living with HIV, although the burden of the epidemic continues to vary considerably between countries and regions. Sub-Saharan Africa remains most severely affected, with nearly 1 in every 25 adults (4.4%) living with HIV and accounting for nearly 70% of the people living with HIV worldwide (WHO, GHO Data).

Problem

Male and female condoms remain the only dual protection devices in the world that protect men and women from both STIs, such as HIV, as well as unplanned pregnancy. The FC2 female condom remains the only dual protection device in the world that is both WHO and USFDA approved and is under the full control of women. Research shows that when a male and female condom are both available in the same market the overall number of protected sex acts goes up with as much as 13% (2006: Hatzell, Feldblum & Van Damme).

Historically, the FC2 female condom has been procured by UNFPA (United Nations Population Fund) and USAID (United States Agency for International Development). Recently, UNFPA has had a 50% decrease in available funding for all their commodity procurement, and the USAID procurement budget is being slashed under the Trump administration leading to a major decline of female condom procurement in Africa:

	2016	2015	2014	2013	2012
UNFPA	10,60	11,21	17,14	34,15	24,55
USAID	9,96	10,02	7,32	4,5	15,63

On a per country example this has led to, for instance, an annual need for 3 million FC2 female condoms in Uganda, and no funding to procure. A need of 1 million female condoms annually in Kenya, and funding for only 230,000. A need of 6 million female condoms annually in Zimbabwe and funding for only 3 million. And these are just some examples of the many countries who do not receive their actual FC2 female condom need on the continent of Africa.

Solution

Female Health Company would like to propose a partnership with new donors in order to ensure that the need for the FC2 female condom is met in Africa to ensure prevention of HIV/AIDS among the target groups that need it. FHC is committed to providing the training and technical support to the countries and target groups to ensure correct and safe usage of the FC2 female condom, if donors are willing to procure the female condoms that are necessary in these countries. We could even create a specific donor brand for the FC2 female condom, to increase brand recognition for the donor in the region while saving lives together.

On Female Health Company

The Female Health Company manufactures, markets and sells the FC2 Female Condom. FC2 is the only currently available female-controlled product approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) and cleared by the World Health Organization (WHO) for purchase by U.N. agencies that provides dual protection against unintended pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections (STIs), including HIV/AIDS. The Company's first generation product was the FC1 Female Condom, a Class III medical device approved by FDA in 1993. The Company's second generation product, FC2, has been available globally since 2007, and in the U.S. since 2009 after it was approved by the FDA as a Class III medical device. To date, FHC has shipped its female condom to over 140 countries worldwide.

Currently, there are only two FDA approved and marketed products that prevent the transmission of HIV/AIDS through sexual intercourse: the male condom and FC2. FC2 is currently the only FDA approved and marketed female-controlled product that prevents STIs, including HIV/AIDS. Used consistently and correctly, FC2 provides women dual protection against STIs, including HIV/AIDS, and unintended pregnancy. When used correctly the protection rates against unintended pregnancies are 95 percent for female condoms compared to 98 percent for male condoms according to the FDA. FC2 is not seen as directly competing with the male condom; it provides an alternative to either unprotected sex or male condom usage.

An economic analysis of the cost effectiveness of an FC2 HIV/AIDS prevention program conducted by Dr. David Holtgrave, the chairman of the Department of Health Behavior and Society at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, was featured in the March 26, 2012 issue of AIDS and Behavior. The study showed that the Washington, D.C. FC2 prevention program, a public-private partnership to provide and promote FC2, prevented enough HIV infections in the first year alone to save over $8 million in avoided future medical care costs (over and above the cost of approximately $445,000 for the program). This means that for every dollar spent on the program, there was a cost savings of nearly $20. In the article Dr. Holtgrave concluded, "These results clearly indicate that delivery of, and education about, Female Condoms is an effective HIV prevention intervention and an outstanding public health investment." Washington, D.C. began its program in 2010 to fight a disease that is at epidemic levels. At least 3 percent of Washington, D.C. residents have HIV or AIDS, a prevalence rate that is the highest of any U.S. city.

In May 2014, a business case was published by Global Health Visions, LLC, commissioned by Rutgers WPF, the advocacy partner of the Universal Access to Female Condoms (UAFC) Joint Programme. Part of the publication was a study comparing total expected costs with total estimated economic benefits and it determined there was an excellent return on investment for female condoms in sub-Saharan Africa. For example, in Nigeria an investment of $1 offers a $3.20 return on investment to the country's economy.

Numerous clinical and behavioral studies have been conducted regarding use of the female condom. Studies show that in many cultures, the female condom is found acceptable by women and their partners. Importantly, studies also show that when the female condom is made available as an option along with male condoms there is a significant increase in protected sex acts with a concurrent decrease in STIs. The increase in protected sex acts varies by country and averages between 10 percent and 35 percent.

FC2 consists of a soft, loose fitting sheath and two rings: an external ring of rolled nitrile and a loose internal ring made of flexible polyurethane. FC2's soft sheath lines the vagina, preventing skin-to-skin contact during intercourse. Its external ring remains outside the vagina, partially covering the external genitalia. The internal ring is used for insertion and helps keep the device in place during use.

FC2's primary raw material, a nitrile polymer, offers a number of benefits over natural rubber latex, the raw material most commonly used in male condoms. FC2's nitrile polymer is stronger than latex, reducing the probability that the female condom sheath will tear during use. Unlike latex, FC2's nitrile polymer quickly transfers heat. FC2 can warm to body temperature immediately upon insertion, which may enhance the user's sensation and pleasure. Unlike the male condom, FC2 may be inserted in advance of arousal, eliminating disruption during sexual intimacy. FC2 is also an alternative to latex sensitive users who are unable to use latex male or female condoms without irritation. To the Company's knowledge, there is no reported allergy to the nitrile polymer. FC2 is pre-lubricated, disposable, and recommended for use during a single sex act. FC2 is not reusable.

The first clinical evidence of AIDS was noted more than thirty years ago. Since then, HIV/AIDS has become the most devastating pandemic facing humankind in recorded history. In November 2009, WHO released statistics indicating that on a world-wide basis, HIV/AIDS is now the leading cause of death in women 15 to 44 years of age. According to WHO, in 2012 worldwide women comprised 50 percent of all the adults living with HIV and approximately 58 percent of all new adult cases of HIV/AIDS in Sub-Saharan Africa. In the United States the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and FDA both list heterosexual sex as the most common method of HIV transmission in women.

For sexually active couples, male condoms and FC2 are the only barrier methods approved by the FDA for preventing sexual transmission of HIV/AIDS. In recent years, scientists have sought to develop alternative means of preventing HIV/AIDS. Based on the complexities of such research, a viable prevention alternative is unlikely to be available in the foreseeable future. To date, it is clear that condoms, male and female, continue to play a key role in the prevention of STIs, including HIV/AIDS. The United Nations Joint Programme on HIV/AIDS (UNAIDS) has reported that, since the beginning of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, it is estimated that condoms have averted approximately 50 million new cases. FC2, when used consistently and correctly, gives a woman control over her sexual health by providing dual protection against STIs, including HIV/AIDS, and unintended pregnancy.

The feminization of HIV/AIDS has increased the relevance of FC2 for the prevention of unintended pregnancies as well as disease prevention. Unintended pregnancy may result in maternal and infant death, babies with HIV/AIDS, AIDS orphans, and increased health care costs.

THE SOCIAL CASE FOR FC2

Empowering women as a development tool by decreasing maternal mortality & fewer unwanted pregnancies and protecting from HIV-infection, and other STIs

- Worldwide 215 million women who like to plan or limit number of children have no access to contraception
- Worldwide 21.6 million unsafe abortions cause 5 million women hospitalized each year, and account for 13 % of maternal deaths
- Worldwide women and girls account for slightly more than half of all HIV infections
- In sub-Saharan Africa 23 million people live with HIV/AIDS: over 12 million are women and nearly 2.5 million are children

THE PRODUCT CASE FOR FC2

1) Only FDA and WHO approved Female Condom and as a result approved for bulk procurement by UNFPA and USAID

2) The strong preference for FC2 due to its non allergenic material nitrile and long standing reputation

3) FC2 is has been distributed to 144 countries.

4) The backup support, materials, training provided by FHC

THE PRODUCT CASE FOR FC2 (2)

5) The FC2 female condom, as opposed to the latex male condom, is made out of Nitrile which holds many benefits:

- Three times stronger than latex,
- Can be used by people who are latex sensitive, or allergic
- Can hold both water and oil based lubricants (latex tears with oil)
- Can be inserted hours in advance
- Transfers body heat ensuring a more natural sensation

6) The FC2 is hormone free, which means that it does not have the side effects of some hormone based contraceptives.

7) Preferable alternative to a male condom, according to males

- Men don’t have to wear it
- Not tight/restricting
- Can be inserted in advance of sexual activity

DEBUNKING MYTHS & MISCONCEPTIONS

Certain Myths and Misconceptions among decision still exist today, even though the evidence tells otherwise

1) It is too expensive
2) There is no demand
3) We already have male condoms and LARCs so the FC is not necessary
4) Men do not like the product, and without them it will never succeed

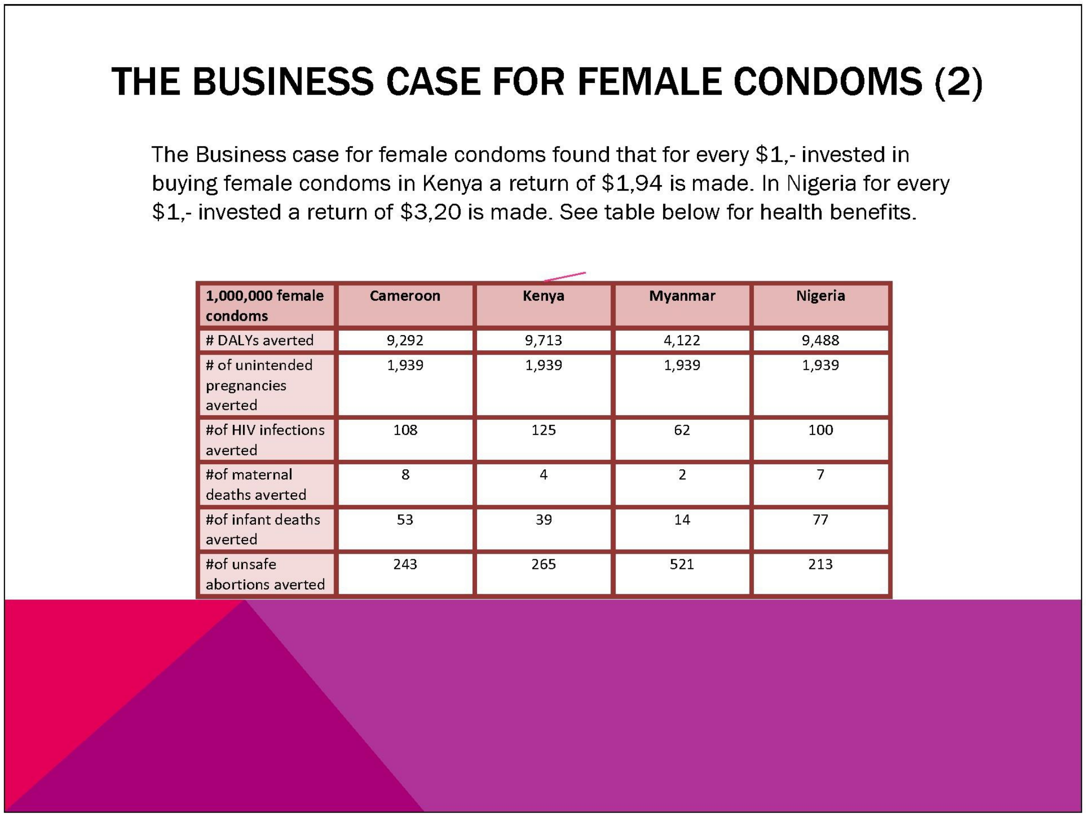
1) IT IS TOO EXPENSIVE: FALSE

"The Business Case for Female Condoms"

(Global Health Visions, 2014)

Return on investment of female condom procurement for governments through 2 ways:

1) Cost savings to the health system, by focussing on prevention instead of treatment
2) Economic productivity losses averted, as more women are able to join the workforce.



THE BUSINESS CASE FOR FEMALE CONDOMS (2)

The Business case for female condoms found that for every $1,- invested in buying female condoms in Kenya a return of $1,94 is made. In Nigeria for every $1,- invested a return of $3,20 is made. See table below for health benefits.

1,000,000 female condoms	Cameroon	Kenya	Myanmar	Nigeria
DALYs averted	9,292	9,713	4,122	9,488
of unintended pregnancies averted	1,939	1,939	1,939	1,939
#of HIV infections averted	108	125	62	100
#of maternal deaths averted	8	4	2	7
#of infant deaths averted	53	39	14	77
#of unsafe abortions averted	243	265	521	213

2) THERE IS NO DEMAND: FALSE

Uruguay Study, UNFPA Uruguay and MOH Uruguay (2017):

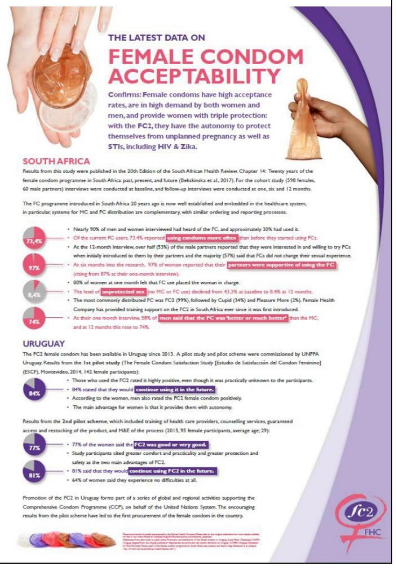
- 77% of average women said the FC2 was good or very good

Study participants cited greater comfort and practicality and greater protection and safety as the two main advantages of the FC2

- 81% said they would continue using the FC2 in the future
- 64 % said they experienced no difficulties at all

South Africa National Female Condom Program Evaluation (2017)

- 80% of women feld the FC put them in charge
- The level of unprotected sex declined from 43,3 % at baseline to 8,4 % at 12 months after the introduction of the FC



THE LATEST DATA ON

FEMALE CONDOM ACCEPTABILITY

Confirms: Female condoms have high acceptance rates, are in high demand by both women and men, and provide women with triple protection: with the FC2, they have the autonomy to protect themselves from unplanned pregnancy as well as STIs, including HIV & Zika.

SOUTH AFRICA

Results from this study were published in the 20th Edition of the South African Health Review. Chapter 14: Twenty years of the female condom programme in South Africa: past, present, and future (Beksinska et al., 2017). For the cohort study (598 females, 60 male partners) interviews were conducted at baseline, and follow-up interviews were conducted at one, six and 12 months.

The FC programme introduced in South Africa 20 years ago is now well established and embedded in the healthcare system; in particular, systems for MC and FC distribution are complementary, with similar ordering and reporting processes.

- Nearly 90% of men and women interviewed had heard of the FC, and approximately 20% had used it.
- Of the current FC users, 73.4% reported using condoms more often than before they started using FCs.
- At the 12-month interview, over half (53%) of the male partners reported that they were interested in and willing to try FCs when initially introduced to them by their partners and the majority (57%) said that FCs did not change their sexual experience.
- At six months into the research, 97% of women reported that their partners were supportive of using the FC (rising from 87% at their one-month interview).
- 80% of women at one month felt that FC use placed the woman in charge.
- The level of unprotected sex (no MC or FC use) declined from 43.3% at baseline to 8.4% at 12 months.
- The most commonly distributed FC was FC2 (99%), followed by Cupid (34%) and Pleasure More (2%). Female Health Company has provided training support on the FC2 in South Africa ever since it was first introduced.
- At their one month interview, 58% of men said that the FC was 'better or much better' than the MC, and at 12 months this rose to 74%.

URUGUAY

The FC2 female condom has been available in Uruguay since 2013. A pilot study and pilot scheme were commissioned by UNFPA Uruguay. Results from the 1st pilot study (The Female Condom Satisfaction Study [Estudio de Satisfacción del Condon Feminino] (ESCF), Montevideo, 2014, 142 female participants):

- Those who used the FC2 rated it highly positive, even though it was practically unknown to the participants.
- 84% stated that they would continue using it in the future.
- According to the women, men also rated the FC2 female condom positively.
- The main advantage for women is that it provides them with autonomy.

Results from the 2nd pilot scheme, which included training of health care providers, counselling services, guaranteed access and restocking of the product, and M&E of the process (2015, 95 female participants, average age; 29):

- 77% of the women said the FC2 was good or very good.
- Study participants cited greater comfort and practicality and greater protection and safety as the two main advantages of FC2.
- 81% said that they would continue using FC2 in the future.
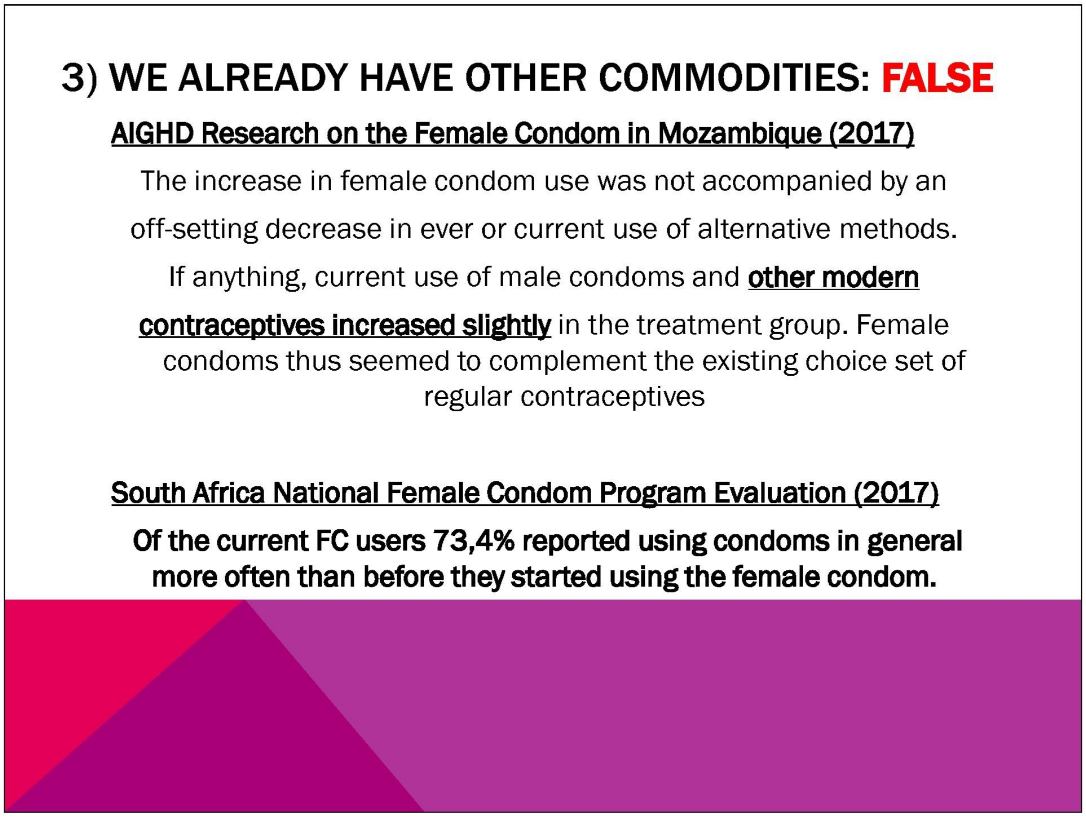
- 64% of women said they experience no difficulties at all.

Promotion of the FC2 in Uruguay forms part of a series of global and regional activities supporting the Comprehensive Condom Programme (CCP), on behalf of the United Nations System. The encouraging results from the pilot scheme have led to the first procurement of the female condom in the country.



3) WE ALREADY HAVE OTHER COMMODITIES: FALSE

AIGHD Research on the Female Condom in Mozambique (2017)

The increase in female condom use was not accompanied by an off-setting decrease in ever or current use of alternative methods. If anything, current use of male condoms and other modern contraceptives increased slightly in the treatment group. Female condoms thus seemed to complement the existing choice set of regular contraceptives

South Africa National Female Condom Program Evaluation (2017)

Of the current FC users 73,4% reported using condoms in general more often than before they started using the female condom.

4) MEN DO NOT LIKE THE PRODUCT: FALSE

South Africa National Female Condom Program Evaluation (2017)

- At their one month interview 58% of men said that the FC was better or much better than the MC and at 12 months this rose to 74%
- At six months into the research 97% of women reported that their partners were supportive of using the FC

IN SUMMARY

1) Female Condoms provide a return on investment
2) Female Condoms are in high demand with both men and women, average and key populations
3) Female Condoms increase the overall use of barrier methods and contraceptives, enforcing decrease in overall number of unprotected sex acts

White House 'looking into' Acosta's role in illegal sex offender plea deal

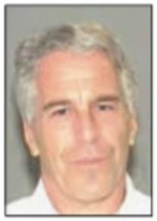
By JOHN T. BENNETT
CQ-Roll Call

WASHINGTON — White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders on Friday declined to say whether President Donald Trump still has confidence in Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta, a day after a federal judge ruled the Justice Department broke the law while Acosta was a U.S. attorney.

A judge said Acosta — then the U.S. attorney in Miami — signed off on a plea deal with Jeffrey Epstein, the Palm Beach billionaire and serial sex abuser, without informing victims about what they were doing.

Epstein also owns the island of Little St. James in the Virgin Islands.

"My understanding is that it's a very complicated case, something we're certainly looking into," Sanders said.



Jeffrey Epstein

The Florida-based U.S. District Judge Kenneth A. Marra ruled Acosta and other officials did not confer with Epstein's victims about the 2008 plea agreement. But, notably, she appeared to defend the labor boss.

"But that they made the best possible deal that they could have gotten at that time," she said. "But, again, that's something we're looking into."

A federal judge said U.S. Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta — then the U.S. attorney in Miami — signed off on a plea deal with Jeffrey Epstein, the Palm Beach billionaire and serial sex abuser, without informing the dozens of victims about what they were doing. Epstein also owns the island of little St. James in the Virgin Islands.

Asked if Trump still has confidence in the latest member of his Cabinet — which he frequently praises as doing a collective solid job — Sanders declined to say the president does. "Again, that's something we're looking into," the spokeswoman said, "I'm not aware of any changes."

The judge said in his decision Thursday that he had reviewed evidence showing Epstein sexually abused more than 30 underage girls at his Palm Beach mansion and elsewhere.

The Crime Victims' Rights Act promises victims that the Justice Department would make its "best efforts" to protect a victim, the filing said. It allows victims the "reasonable right" to confer with the U.S. attorneys handling the case.

The deal reached between Acosta and Epstein's attorneys allowed him to not be prosecuted in federal court, and instead sentenced in state court. The immunity from prosecution also extended to some of Epstein's co-conspirators.

Epstein pleaded guilty to two prostitution charges and served 13 months in county jail, according to the Miami Herald. The victims were not told of the agreement or sentencing until it was too late to intervene.

The Department of Justice announced earlier this month it has opened an investigation into the handling of Epstein's case.

Israel Policy Forum

On Iran: How to Repair the Widening American-Israeli Rift

Ephraim Sneh

The Islamist takeover in the Middle East and North Africa has created perilous strategic turbulence in the region. Consequently, it is now critically important that the United States and its few allies cooperate closely. Unfortunately, this has not been the case in recent weeks for US-Israel relations regarding Iran's nuclear program. The disagreement about attacking Iran's nuclear facilities has turned into ugly bickering, much of it disguised. This is harmful for both Israel and the United States.

To heal this rift – which is necessary to effectively address the Iranian threat – we must understand the following basic facts:

1. The Israeli fear of a nuclear Iran is genuine. It is not a political trick of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu or Defense Minister Ehud Barak. A nuclear Iran would bolster and encourage extremist militant forces across the region. The moderates would be discouraged, intimidated and invariably weakened to the point where they would be unable to negotiate with Israel. In just a few years, Israel will be surrounded by three 'Pakistan-like' countries: Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Turkey. All three would possess nuclear weapons and be dominated politically by Islamists. In such a scenario, Israel would lose its strategic advantage in the region. It would lose its lead as a country of entrepreneurship and excellence, as foreign investment would decline and talented young Israelis would build their future abroad. No responsible Israeli leader will allow such a nightmare to become a reality. The hateful declarations of Iran's leaders, committed to wiping the Jewish state off the map, do not assuage Israelis' fears.

2. Economic sanctions cannot convince the regime in Teheran to abandon its nuclear project. However, sanctions can bring about the collapse of the regime if they are vigorously implemented and enforced.

3. An American military strike against Iran's nuclear facilities would be more effective than an Israeli one. But disparaging Israel's capabilities and its military ingenuity, undermining its deterrence effect, is a grave mistake.

4. Israel's operational window is closing. If Israel has to cope alone with the Iranian threat, its window of operational opportunity is narrower than the American one. It has to act sooner.

5. An Israeli military strike in the next two months, contravening repeated demands by the U.S. President to postpone it, would be counterproductive. The damage of defying the President would be greater than the damage sustained by allowing the Iranian regime an additional few months of advancing toward acquiring the bomb. Such a strike may broaden the gap between the U.S. and Israel and weaken the alliance, which all previous Israeli Prime-Ministers have safeguarded as a strategic asset of Israel.

6. The United States has failed to prevent countries like Pakistan or North Korea from obtaining nuclear weapons. This record feeds Israeli skepticism about a U.S. success in the case of Iran. This skepticism prevails despite the clear rhetoric and unquestionable commitments of the President and the Secretaries of State and Defense to prevent a nuclear Iran.

7. The fact that the Israeli Prime Minister and the Republican presidential candidate share the same political benefactor feeds suspicions in the Obama administration about Netanyahu's motives for attacking Iran a few weeks before the U.S. presidential elections.

8. The regional perspective cannot continue ignoring the unresolved Israeli-Palestinian conflict. This issue can no longer be swept under the rug. Maintaining the status quo is politically comfortable in the short-run, but it will be combustible and devastating in the long run. Achieving the two-state solution will preserve Israel as a Jewish, democratic state. It will end Israel's regional isolation. It will rebuild America's standing and influence in the Arab and Muslim world. Furthermore, these last two outcomes will strengthen America's and Israel's hands in thwarting Iran's nuclear weapons ambitions.

These eight basic facts combine to produce a complex reality. When fully understood, they can pave the way to restoring U.S.-Israeli harmony. There is no symmetry between the United States, the super-power, and its tiny ally, Israel. But the "package" required from each side in order to mend fences has to include the following mutual commitments:

1. Israel will not attack Iran in 2012.

2. The United States will hold a joint intelligence estimate session with Israel in the early spring of 2013. If the conclusion of this joint estimate is that there is no substantial slow-down of the Iranian nuclear project, the U.S. will take military action to destroy this project.

3. The United States will oppose any attempt to intervene in Israel's strategic capacities and will prevent any monitoring of Israel's own strategic installations. At the same time, the United States will uncompromisingly support Israel's right to preserve and develop its indigenous military capacities.

4. Israel will accept an American invitation to attend a peace conference that will be convened in the U.S. no later than mid-2013. This gathering will address the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, aiming to resolve it once and for all with an agreed-upon timetable for implementation.

These four commitments would serve the interests of both the United States and Israel. They would enable the U.S. to resume its leadership role of peacemaking in the Middle East. And they would provide a basis for binding the U.S. and Israel together as they face these challenging times.

Ephraim Sneh, a retired IDF General, served as Israel's deputy minister of defense. He is currently and Israel Policy Forum contributing fellow and chairman of S. Daniel Abraham Center for Strategic Dialogue at the Netanya Academic College.

The Ayatollah Always Says No

Editorial

February 8, 2013 --The Farsi word for "no" is na h, which is easy enough to remember. Maybe even Joe Biden won't forget it the next time the U.S. tries to reach out diplomatically to Iran.

We're speaking of the Administration's latest effort to come to terms with Tehran over its nuclear programs, which Mr. Biden made last weekend at the Munich Security Conference. The U.S. offer of direct bilateral talks, he said, "stands, but it must be real and tangible." Iranian foreign minister Ali Akbar Salehi, who was also at the conference though he refused to meet with U.S. officials, called Mr. Biden's comments "a step forward."

Mr. Salehi's remark set the usual hearts aflutter that Iran is finally serious about a deal. But the optimism was brief. On Thursday, Iran's Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei flatly rejected direct talks with the U.S. "The U.S. is pointing a gun at Iran and wants us to talk to them," he said. "Direct talks will not solve any problems."

This isn't the first time Mr. Khamenei has played chaste Daphne to President Obama's infatuated Apollo. Just after becoming President in 2009, Mr. Obama sent the Ayatollah two private letters and delivered a conciliatory speech for the Persian new year of Nowruz. Mr. Khamenei's answer: "They chant the slogan of change but no change is seen in practice." He told a crowd chanting "death to America" that "if a hand is stretched covered with a velvet glove but it is cast iron inside, that makes no sense."

That was in March 2009. In October of that year the U.S. and its allies tentatively worked out a deal with Iranian negotiators to move some of their enriched uranium outside Iran. Western analysts were confident that Mr. Khamenei would give his blessing, given the international pressure he was said to be under following the fraudulent elections and the bloody crackdown that followed.

The Ayatollah quashed that deal too: "Whenever they [Americans] smile at the officials of the Islamic revolution, when we carefully look at the situation, we notice that they are hiding a dagger behind their back."

It was the same in January 2011, when diplomacy also collapsed. Ditto in 2012, when negotiations in February, May and June each ended in failure. Washington went into those talks thinking they were going to succeed on the theory that Tehran desperately wants relief from the supposedly crippling pressure of economic sanctions.

Why does the Ayatollah keep saying no? The conventional wisdom is that previous U.S. offers weren't generous enough, or that the wrong President was in the White House, or that Iran wants only to deal directly with the U.S. and not in multilateral forums. Each of these theories has been tested and shown to be false.

A more persuasive explanation—get ready for this shocker—is that Iran really wants a bomb. The regime believes, not unreasonably, that Moammar Gadhafi would still be in power had he not given up his nuclear program in 2003. Mr. Khamenei also fears a "velvet revolution" scenario, in which more normal ties with the West threaten the ideological foundations of the Islamic Republic. Confrontation with America is in this regime's DNA.

Meantime, the pretense of negotiations has allowed Tehran to play for time to advance its programs. When Mr. Obama took office, Iran had enriched 1,000 kilos of reactor-grade uranium. In its last report from November, U.N. inspectors found that Iran has produced 7,611 kilos to reactor grade, along with 232 kilos of uranium enriched to 20%, which is close to bomb-grade. Last month, Iran declared that it would install 3,000 advanced centrifuges at its Natanz facility, which can enrich uranium at two to three times its current rate.

As for the sanctions, they may hurt ordinary Iranians but this regime is famously indifferent to the suffering of its own people. The Ayatollah also doesn't seem to take the Administration's talk about "all options being on the table" seriously. Mr. Obama's nomination of Iran dove Chuck Hagel to be Secretary of Defense reinforces that impression, as do reports that the White House blocked Pentagon and CIA plans to arm the opposition that's fighting to overthrow Iran's client regime in Damascus. An America that won't help proxies in a proxy war isn't likely to take the fight directly to Iran's nuclear facilities.

In rejecting Mr. Biden's offer, the Ayatollah said frankly, "I'm not a diplomat; I'm a revolutionary." Another round of multilateral talks with Iran is set to resume this month, but maybe Joe Biden and his boss should start taking no for an answer.

Foreign Policy

Let's face it: Obama's Iran policy is failing

James Traub

February 8, 2013 -- There is no better example of an Obama administration initiative that has succeeded on its own terms, and yet failed as policy, than Iran. By engaging the regime in Tehran, and being rebuffed, the White House has been able to enlist China, Russia, and the European Union in imposing tough sanctions on Iran. By steadily ratcheting up those sanctions, the administration has been able to gradually squeeze the Iranian economy. By insisting that "containment" is not an option, Obama has persuaded Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu that he need not launch an attack on Iran's nuclear facilities -- at least not any time soon.

Obama has done everything right, and yet his Iran policy is failing. There is no evidence that the sanctions will bring Iran to its knees and force the supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, to accept the humiliation of abandoning his nuclear program. But neither is there any sign of new thinking in the White House. "I don't see how what didn't work last year is going to work this year," says Vali Nasr, who served in the Obama State Department before becoming dean of the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies. He might not get much of an argument from White House officials, who, the New York Times recently noted, "seem content with stalemate."

The United States is not negotiating directly with Iran but rather doing so through the P5+1, which consists of the five permanent Security Council members and Germany. The P5+1's current position is that Iran must stop enriching nuclear fuel to 20 percent purity -- a point from which Iran could quickly move to weapons-grade material -- transfer its existing stock of such fuel to a third country, and shut down one of its two enrichment facilities, known as Fordow. In exchange, the parties will help Iran produce such fuel for medical purposes, which the regime claims is its actual goal. Iran has refused, saying it will not shut down Fordow.

But the current state of play masks the larger issue, which is that the ayatollah and those around him believe the United States wants to make Iran cry uncle -- which happens to be true. The next round of P5+1 negotiations, now scheduled for Feb. 25 in Kazakhstan, are almost certainly not going to go anywhere unless the United States signals that it is prepared to make what the Iranians view as meaningful and equivalent moves in exchange for Iranian concessions. Arms-control experts say that both British Prime Minister David Cameron and Catherine Ashton, head of foreign affairs for the European Union, favor offering Iran a reduction in sanctions; but there's a limit to what they can do without the United States.

Of course, such flexibility would be pointless if Iran is simply hell-bent on gaining the capacity to produce a nuclear weapon. The signals, as always with Iran, are cryptic. Iranian authorities have told nuclear inspectors that they plan to install a new generation of centrifuges in order to accelerate enrichment. And yet Iran also chose to convert some of its stockpile of highly enriched uranium for medical use rather than approach the amount needed for a bomb, leading Israeli authorities to predict that Iran wouldn't be able to build a bomb before 2015 or 2016. Last week, Ali Akbar Velayati, Khamenei's foreign policy advisor, publicly criticized officials who have treated the negotiations dismissively. Presumably, he was thinking of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, who has compared Iran's nuclear program to a train without brakes.

Iran is now at the outset of what promises to be a raucous presidential election, and may be no more capable of serious negotiations between now and June than the United States was in 2012. But what is clear is that the sanctions have moderated Iranian behavior and rhetoric. At the same time, as the Times also noted, the economic pressure is not nearly great enough to compel concessions that the regime would view as a blow to national pride. In short, Iran might -- might -- be more willing to accept a face-saving compromise than they were a year or two ago, but will need serious inducements to do so.

What would that entail? Virtually all the proposals that have come from outside experts suggest that the P5+1 begin with modest confidence-building measures, especially in the period before the election. A recent report by the Arms Control Association enumerates several of them. Western diplomats, for example, could take up Ali Akbar Salehi, Iran's foreign minister, on his proposal to limit the "extent" of enrichment -- i.e., well below 20 percent -- in exchange for fuel rods for the research reaction and a recognition of Iran's "right to enrich," a notional concept the United States already supports under specified conditions. Or Iran could suspend 20-percent enrichment in exchange for a suspension of new sanctions. But Iran is unlikely to accept even such small steps unless it felt that additional moves would win additional explicit concessions.

Beyond that, the outlines of what in Middle East peacemaking is known as "final status" are clear enough: Iran agrees to verifiable inspections to ensure that it does not enrich uranium beyond 3.5 percent and does not pursue a nuclear weapons program, while the West accepts Iran's "right to enrich" and dismantles sanctions. Of course, the outlines of a Middle East peace deal are clear enough, too. But in both cases, neither side trusts the other, and each demands that the other go first. Instead, nobody goes anywhere.

U.S. officials have very good reason to be wary of Iran's bona fides. In 2009, they reached a deal with Iranian negotiators to send the stockpile of highly enriched uranium out of the country -- only to see the ayatollah repudiate it. As Ray Takeyh, an Iran expert with the Council on Foreign Relations puts it, "Khamenei has created a politics where it's hard for him to compromise." But so has the United States. Anyone who watched Chuck Hagel's confirmation hearing knows that it is an article of faith in Congress -- and pretty much a bipartisan one -- that Iran is a faithless, illegitimate terrorist state that will be deterred from building a bomb only by the threat of massive attack. Had Hagel been foolish enough to suggest that the United States offer to reduce sanctions in exchange for Iranian concessions, the White House would have had to find a new candidate for defense secretary.

It's the U.S. Congress that arguably holds the high cards, though the White House put them in its hands. The most potent sanctions are legislated, and have been written in such a way that they will be very hard to unwind. Obama can waive them for up to six months. But the ayatollah is not about to make irreversible decisions in exchange for six months of relief.

The White House is thus stuck between Tehran and Capitol Hill. And it can't live long with the current stalemate. After all, Obama has said that "containment" is not an option. He is hoping that the combination of economic pain and fear of military action will bring Tehran to its senses. If it doesn't, the president has said that he is prepared to use force. Perhaps he feels that just as spurned engagement served as the predicate for tough sanctions, so would failed negotiations lay the predicate for a broadly supported strike against Iran's nuclear facilities. Iran left us no choice, he might say, as the bombers fly.

That would constitute a diplomatic triumph ... if a strike against Iran's nuclear facilities is a good idea. If in fact it's a dreadful prospect -- worse, perhaps, even than containment -- then it would constitute a failure that would obliterate the record of adroit diplomacy of the last four years. Obama understands very well -- even if many members of Congress do not -- that even our worst adversaries have interests of their own, that those interests feel as legitimate to them as ours do to us, and that we at least have a chance of settling disputes with them if we can find the place where our interests overlap. The time has come for him to apply that wisdom to Iran.

An uneasy courtship as Iran and Egypt test the waters

Alan Philps

Feb 8, 2013 -- There is a consensus among commentators that the visit of the Iranian president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, to Egypt - complete with red carpet and kiss on both cheeks from President Mohammed Morsi - does not amount to a breakthrough. The view of US think-tanks is that it does not amount to very much at all, and certainly not worth getting anxious about. Such a consensus is always dangerous, and it is worth looking more closely at what it is based on.

Mr Ahmadinejad is the first Iranian leader to set foot in Cairo since the deposed Shah of Iran was given refuge in Cairo, where he died and received a state funeral. The two countries have not had diplomatic relations since 1979.

The Iranian president's visit has deep historical significance, even if he came as a guest of the Organisation of the Islamic Conference summit. The picture of the two presidents embracing says to the world: Egypt is released from the US straitjacket and is free to resume its position as a regional power.

There are plenty of reasons, however, to dismiss the visit as just show. Mr Ahmadinejad is a lame duck, banned by the constitution from running for a third term in the June elections. As Iran moves into a period of war economy under the pressure of sanctions designed to curb its nuclear programme, Mr Ahmadinejad is engaged in a furious struggle to ensure that his rival, the parliamentary speaker, Ali Larijani, does not succeed him. The corruption allegations levelled by Mr Ahmadinejad against the Larijani family are deeply damaging to the Iranian regime.

Mr Morsi, meanwhile, has little to show Egyptians that he has improved their lot. Cairo is the scene of near-constant street battles and the economy is tanking. Egypt's currency reserves have just sunk to $13.6 billion (Dh50 billion), below the critical level needed to cover three months of imports. The country is staring bankruptcy in the face, but cannot access emergency funds from the International Monetary Fund without implementing unpopular reforms that would further raise social tensions.

Both leaders need to show that they have "friends" abroad. The reality is a little different. Egypt and Iran appear to be divided by the Syria conflict, which is symptomatic of the wider split between the Sunni Muslim powers, led by Saudi Arabia, and Iran's faltering "axis of resistance" that, with Syria in play and Hamas having defected, now looks increasingly like a Shia Muslim axis.

If we look more closely, then the story of Egypt resuming its role as a regional power looks premature. At this stage, Egypt is trying to find some space to manoeuvre between Saudi Arabia and Iran. Given that Saudi Arabia has the money that Egypt needs, and Washington has a lock on the actions of the IMF, that space is limited.

But what does Washington think? Not very much at the moment. With President Barack Obama's second term team still being assembled, it is not surprising that there is something of a vacuum in Middle East policy. But the issue is deeper than that. The Obama administration has declared it wants to focus on the Asia-Pacific region and, surprisingly, it means what it says.

Only a year after troops withdrew from Iraq, that country is not talked about in Washington, like an embarrassing relative. In North Africa, the US military has taken a back seat while the work of toppling Colonel Muammar Qaddafi and driving back the jihadists in Mali has been left to Franco-British forces. Syrian policy is one of drift, where the administration finds all options unpalatable. In Egypt, Washington has set a red line for the Muslim Brotherhood leadership: it must adhere to the peace treaty with Israel. Everything else is negotiable.

This week the Pentagon revealed that it would no longer be stationing two aircraft carriers in the Gulf region, as it has done for most of the past two years, due to cuts in the defence budget, and the possibility of even more stringent ones if Congress fails to agree on raising the US debt ceiling.

The Iranian nuclear programme remains a priority in Washington, but the carrier decision indicates a less warlike stance. One cannot say that US power is ebbing, but there is a clear lack of political will in Washington for decisive action in the Middle East. For now, the logic is that regional powers will have to take more responsibility. Egypt, although impotent at the moment, will have to find its role. The US needs to talk to Iran if there is ever going to be a compromise on its nuclear programme. Maybe Egypt could help.

Both Egypt and Iran have denied a report that General Qassem Suleimani, commander of the Quds force, a division of the Iranian Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, and the man responsible for Iran's military operations in Syria, visited Cairo in January. There was no reaction in Washington to this report.

If there is going to be a resolution of the Syrian crisis without a decade of Lebanon-style war, then allies of the US will have to speak to someone of the calibre of Gen Suleimani, a far more important figure than Mr Ahmadinejad. Could this lead to a historic compromise between the Muslim Brotherhood and the ayatollahs to create a new Islamic front spreading revolution?

That is out of the question. Egypt is too reliant on foreign finance, which Iran cannot offer at the moment, for it to swing into Tehran's orbit. And there is far too much domestic opposition.

What is clear is that while the US is reluctant to take direct responsibility, other countries must find ways of resolving the regional contradictions that have become unmanageable in the era of American tutelage. That will lead to some unlikely meetings taking place. The Morsi-Ahmadinejad embrace may not be a breakthrough, but it does show one thing: what was unthinkable a few years ago may one day be the norm.

Hamas Weighs Options For Recognizing Israel

Adnan Abu Amer

February 8 -- Recently, a lot has been said — and a lot of denials have been issued — about Hamas recognizing a two-state solution. It appears that Hamas is still vacillating between explicitly and implicitly recognizing Israel. Hamas realizes that recognizing Israel would open up the world's doors to the movement. At the same time, Hamas knows that such a move would be seen as a betrayal by the movement's supporters, both inside and outside Palestine. As Hamas well knows, its legitimacy derives from its vocal support for armed struggle within the complicated Palestinian reality. Hamas also knows that it will pay a heavy price if it is seen to be agreeing to international conditions. The cost will not only be political, but also ideological. Hamas has spent many years talking and writing about its notion of the state, its identity, borders, concept, constitution and the role of Islam within it. Generations of Hamas members were raised on those ideas. But those ideas have remained part of the imagination and heritage, and of the nostalgic dream of restoring the Islamic caliphate.

The concept of the state

Today's debate within Hamas over the concept of the state is more concrete than theoretical. The political conditions in the Palestinian territories do not allow for dreaming about unrealistic grand theories being promoted by some Islamist movements. Hamas is facing real-world problems that require real-world solutions. The Palestinian state being envisioned by Palestinian, Arab, and world politicians is based on the June 1967 borders. But does that fit Hamas's political vision and intellectual orientation? Generations of Islamists have been raised on the concept of the "Islamic state," which is synonymous with the Islamic caliphate. But Hamas's situation is a little different. Israel's occupation of all Palestinian territories is a political and concrete obstacle to the dream of an Islamic state and it forces the consideration of more realistic options. So we have started hearing, from Hamas, statements about establishing a Palestinian state on the June 1967 borders. There is no doubt that this development is an intellectual and political shift by Hamas. More than 20 years ago, Hamas founder Sheik Ahmed Yassin proposed a long truce with Israel. But today, such a proposal is more realistic and is attributed to Hamas's current leader Khaled Meshaal. Hamas in 2013 is different than Hamas in 1993. Hamas is now an influential player and its statements and stances are taken into account by regional and international decision-making circles.

Recognition and commitment

The shuttle diplomacy by Western officials between Gaza, where Hamas's domestic leadership is located, and the Arab capitals of Doha, Cairo and Amman have only one objective: getting Hamas to agree to the conditions that would allow it to be embraced by the international community. In other words, they want Hamas to agree to the two-state solution. And that, explicitly or implicitly, essentially means that Hamas has recognized Israel's right to exist! Those who have been following Hamas's course since it was founded 25 years ago notice that every once in awhile there is international pressure to make Hamas agree to those conditions. But Hamas is afraid to fall into the same trap that others, like Fatah, have fallen into without getting anything in return except loss of popular support, as was demonstrated in the elections seven years ago. In light of the demands that the movement should recognize the two-state solution and make political commitments, some influential circles within the Hamas leadership think that the movement is being drawn into going beyond its rational political discourse and how it deals with the reality on the ground, and into recognizing Israel and exchanging messages with it. However, the siege has made the Palestinian territories miserable. So decision-makers in Hamas are forced to issue hints and signals that do not affect the movement's general principles. Those signals, however, may be misunderstood. And this is where the problem lies. No one thinks that Hamas supporters will make a big deal of those signals, but any concrete steps toward recognizing Israel will cost Hamas dearly, something which I don't think Hamas wants during this dangerous phase. At the external level, Hamas's enemies and opponents may think that the siege has finally paid off, albeit a little late, and that Hamas's current declarations are signals that, if the siege and the Palestinian suffering continue, the movement may explicitly recognize Israel, which would open the "appetite" of Hamas' opponents for more breakthroughs in its ideology and principles.

Not an existential conflict, but a border dispute.

Although Hamas is aware of all that, it should be noted that in a few months it is facing elections during which the movement's signals that it may accept a two-state solution will be used in a fierce anti-Hamas campaign. Even though the movement has provided a different administrative performance than before, the fundamental change in the movement's political program may be a decisive factor for the Palestinian voters. As Hamas is being smothered, with a few breaches here and there, the demands that it should recognize Israel are ongoing and without letup. In other words, Hamas must choose between recognizing Israel to stay in power, or losing what it has achieved democratically as punishment for having to refused to bow to the world's conditions. In reality, the international community has not significantly changed its relationship with the Palestinians, including Hamas, over the past months and years. There has only been some cosmetic and tactical changes. Washington, the European Union and the UN have not only signaled to Hamas that it should join the “broken and paralyzed” peace process, they have also insisted that the Palestinians explicitly recognize Israel. But this time, those powers are armed with an “Islamic religious cloak,” which would make a recognition of Israel more meaningful, especially since Hamas considers its conflict with Israel to be an ideological “existential conflict, not a border dispute.” That pressure is accompanied with a financial and economic blockade, which is increasing the pressure on Hamas, especially since those carrying out the blockade are blocking anything that would alleviate Palestinian suffering. It is clear that they want to punish the Palestinians for electing Hamas and warn them against reelecting them; that is if the reconciliation succeeds and the elections happen on time. It should be noted that certain Israeli and Western research institutions have estimated the timeframe that Hamas will need to explicitly recognize Israel. They may accept from Hamas certain rhetorical signals for a while before the movement officially recognizes Israel. Since Hamas was founded in late 1987, it has been conducting an ideological and political campaign for its members and supporters against recognizing Israel. Hamas’ constitution says that Israel is a “cancer that must be eradicated,” and that “its demise is a Quranic inevitability.” Those and other slogans have been a key component of Hamas’s political discourse. It is therefore not easy for Hamas to change overnight due to political realism and suddenly tell its supporters: We shall recognize Israel, but it’s under duress!

An Assassination in Tunisia

Editorial

February 8, 2013 -- Tunisia is where the Arab Spring began just over two years ago. Until now it has set an encouraging example of progress toward democracy and pluralism. Free elections brought to power a coalition government pledged to pragmatic cooperation between a moderate-led Islamist party, Ennahda, and smaller, secular coalition partners.

Progress has not always been smooth. But just as Tunisians inspired people in neighboring countries like Egypt and Libya to rise up against their corrupt and repressive dictators, they also seemed, for many, to point the way toward a democratic future accommodating both religious beliefs and the rights of the secular under the rule of law.

Those hopes have been severely shaken by the murder on Wednesday of Chokri Belaid. Mr. Belaid, a human- rights activist and one of Ennahda’s most outspoken critics, had publicly challenged the party’s failure to investigate or prosecute violent acts of intimidation carried out by shadowy gangs of religious extremists. Mr. Belaid’s killers have not yet been identified. But suspicion now falls on those same extremist groups, which had issued public threats against Mr. Belaid and other prominent secular leaders — without any serious government response.

Thousands gathered for Mr. Belaid’s funeral on Friday amid a nationwide general strike called by his trade union supporters. Tensions are high. What is urgently needed is a credible, independent investigation of Mr. Belaid’s murder, followed by prosecution of the killers.

Given Ennahda’s record of selectively ignoring Islamist violence, that investigation cannot be left to its appointees alone. A preferable alternative would be to reconstitute the broad-based, multiparty commissions that successfully oversaw Tunisia’s free elections in October 2011 and investigated the crimes of the fallen dictatorship.

Ennahda, which captured 41 percent of the vote in the elections, promised to cooperate with secular parties and show respect for pluralism. Instead, it is sending muddled messages. On Wednesday, Prime Minister Hamadi Jebali made a conciliatory gesture by proposing a temporary nonpolitical cabinet and new elections. Unfortunately, hard-line party members quickly repudiated him.

Tunisia's revolution, which has overcome past crises, can overcome this one if Ennahda and all other Tunisian parties recommit themselves to nonviolence, mutual tolerance and upholding the rule of law.

Iraq's return to bloodshed

Kimberly Kagan and Frederick W. Kagan

February 8, 2013 -- Eighteen days of protests in Egypt in 2011 electrified the world. But more than twice that many days of protest in Iraq have gone almost unnoticed in the United States. Iraqi army troops killed five Sunni protesters in Fallujah on Jan. 25, after a month of anti-government protests in Anbar, Nineveh and Salahuddin provinces and elsewhere for which thousands turned out. Al-Qaeda in Iraq and Iranian-backed Shiite militias are re-mobilizing. Iraq teeters on the brink of renewed insurgency and, potentially, civil war.

This crisis matters for America. U.S. vital interests that have been undermined over the past year include preventing Iraq from becoming a haven for al-Qaeda and destabilizing the region by becoming a security vacuum or a dictatorship that inflames sectarian civil war; containing Iranian influence in the region; and ensuring the free flow of oil to the global market.

While tensions have risen over the past two years, the triggers for recent eruptions are clear. Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, a Shiite, had the bodyguards of Finance Minister Rafie al-Issawi, who is Sunni, arrested for alleged terrorist activities on Dec. 20 — almost exactly one year after he ordered the arrest of Sunni Vice President Tariq al-Hashimi's security detail. Hashimi fled to Turkey and is unlikely to return soon to Iraq, where he was sentenced to death after Maliki demanded his trial in absentia for murder and financing terrorism.

The threat to Issawi, a moderate technocrat from Anbar, galvanized Iraqi Sunnis, who rightly saw Maliki's move as sectarian and an assault on government participation by Sunnis not under the prime minister's thumb. Three days after the arrests, demonstrations broke out in Ramadi, Fallujah and Samarra. Three days after that, a large protest closed the highway from Baghdad to Syria and Jordan. The popular resistance spread to Mosul on Dec. 27.

These protests erupted during a constitutional crisis and as an expanding Arab-Kurd conflict has become increasingly militarized. Iraqi President Jalal Talabani was incapacitated by a stroke on Dec. 17 and has been out of the countryfor treatment. Iraq's constitution specifies a line of succession — but with one vice president in exile and the other a Shiite and obvious Maliki proxy, Iraq has been, in effect, operating without a president. Political processes that require presidential involvement have been paralyzed, including moving forward with long-standing efforts by Sunnis and Kurds to hold a parliamentary vote of no-confidence in Maliki.

Talabani had been the critical link holding Baghdad and Kurdistan together since tensions rose following a 10-day standoff between Iraqi army units and Kurdish pesh merga troops in October, after Maliki sent the army toward the disputed city of Kirkuk. That move followed a series of skirmishes and mobilizations along the "Green Line" separating Kurdistan from Arab Iraq and a series of attacks in the area by al-Qaeda in Iraq.

The recent protests underscore the collapse of the inclusive political accommodation reached in 2007, which had been reconfirmed by the formation of a grand Sunni-Shiite-Kurd coalition government after parliamentary elections in 2010. By November 2012, Maliki had evolved to openly discussing his intention to form a “majoritarian government” that would exclude the most important Sunni representatives. In mid-December he participated in creating a Shiite grand alliance as the launching pad for that government. The principal Sunni political leaders, including Issawi, parliamentary speaker Osama al-Nujaifiand Anbari tribal leader Ahmed abu Rishaannounced their intention to form their own coalition. In short, Iraqi politics was re-fragmenting along sectarian and ethnic lines even before the protests began.

Understood in this context, the Iraqi army’s killing of protesters in Fallujah last month is a watershed event similar to the destruction of the Askariya shrine in Samarra in February 2006, though the crisis will not escalate as quickly. Sunni-Shiite tensions have hitherto played out in political forums. The key actors in today’s crisis are not the Sunni political leaders but, rather, Anbari tribal leaders, including Ali Hatem Ali Suleiman, one of the most powerful leaders of Iraq’s largest Sunni tribe. Suleiman and fellow leaders of the Dulaim tribe were essential to engineering the Anbar Awakening in 2007 and Sunni participation in the government, for which they rejected al-Qaeda in Iraq and renounced violence against the state. They responded to the killings of protesters last month by threatening open war against the state for the first time since 2007. So far at least, they have restrained protesters and resisted violent confrontation.

For his part, Maliki has sought to deescalate the conflict and to mollify protesters. Tehran has also been working — to persuade Iraq’s Sadrists, whom Maliki has alienated in his consolidation of power, to abandon their support for their Sunni brethren. Their combined efforts appear to be working: The Sadrist Bloc, which had refused Maliki’s request for suggestions to replace Issawi and other Sunni politicians, has put forth a substitute finance minister.

These efforts, ostensibly toward political resolution, actually increase the likelihood of sectarian war by continuing the marginalization of Sunni political leaders without addressing Sunni tribes’ core grievances — and by re-creating a Shiite front that had splintered.

Al-Qaeda in Iraq has already taken advantage of this situation through its front group, the Islamic State of Iraq, which deployed combat teams in Fallujah last month that targeted Iraqi army positions and killed several soldiers. The jihadists' black flags have appeared at Sunni protests and memorial ceremonies for the fallen. The group is back in the havens it held in 2006. If Maliki does not allow proper Sunni representation in government, al-Qaeda will gain greater popular tolerance and foreign support.

Over the past year, the situation in Iraq has become explosive while sectarian sentiment and armed violence in neighboring nations have escalated dramatically. Americans have become accustomed to watching Iraq approach the precipice and draw back. But circumstances have changed with the withdrawal of all U.S. forces and Maliki's year-long efforts to intimidate his opponents through political, judicial and military maneuvers. If Maliki does not accept many of the protesters' reasonable demands and allow meaningful Sunni participation in government, prospects for stopping Iraq's descent into sectarian conflict are grim.

Islam and Islamism in the Modern World

An interview with Daniel Pipes (By Tom Bethell)

February 2013 -- Daniel Pipes, one of our leading experts on Islam, established the Middle East Forum and became its head in 1994. He was born in 1949 and grew up in Cambridge, Massachusetts. His father, Richard Pipes, was a professor of Russian history, now emeritus, at Harvard. Daniel studied Arabic and Islamic history and lived in Cairo for three years. His PhD dissertation became his first book, Slave Soldiers and Islam (1981). Then his interest in purely academic subjects expanded to include modern Islam. He left the university because, as he told an interviewer from Harvard Magazine, he has "the simple politics of a truck driver, not the complex ones of an academic." His story of being harassed through the legal system by a Muslim who later committed suicide was recently told in The American Spectator ("A Palestinian in Texas," TAS, November 2012). He has been personally threatened but prefers not to talk about specifics except to note that law enforcement has been involved. I interviewed Pipes shortly before Christmas, when the Egyptians were voting on their new constitution. I started out by saying that the number of Muslims in the U.S. has doubled since the 9/11 attacks.

DP: My career divides in two: before and after 9/11. In the first part I was trying to show that Islam is relevant to political concerns. If you want to understand Muslims, I argued, you need to understand the role of Islam in their lives. Now that seems obvious. If anything, there's a tendency to over-emphasize Islam; to assume that Muslims are dominated by the Koran and are its automatons—which goes too far. You can't just read the Koran to understand Muslim life. You have to look at history, at personalities, at economics, and so on.

TB: Do you see the revival of Islam as a reality?

DP: Yes. Half a century ago Islam was waning, the application of its laws became ever more remote, and the sense existed that Islam, like other religions, was in decline. Since then there has been a sharp and I think indisputable reversal. We're all talking about Islam and its laws now.

TB: At the same time you have raised an odd question: "Can Islam survive Islamism?" Can you explain that?

DP: I draw a distinction between traditional Islam and Islamism. Islamism emerged in its modern form in the 1920s and is driven by a belief that Muslims can be strong and rich again if they follow the Islamic law severely and in its entirety. This is a response to the trauma of modern Islam. And yet this form of Islam is doing deep damage to faith, to the point that I wonder if Islam will ever recover.

TB: Give us the historical context.

DP: The modern era for Muslims began with Napoleon's invasion of Egypt in 1798. Muslims experienced a great shock at seeing how advanced the blue-eyed peoples from the north had become. It would be roughly analogous to the Eskimos coming down south and decimating Westerners, who would uncomprehendingly ask in response, "Who are these people and how are they defeating us?"

TB: So how did they respond?

DP: Muslims over the past 200 years have made many efforts to figure out what went wrong. They have experimented with several answers. One was to emulate liberal Europe—Britain and France—until about 1920. Another was to emulate illiberal Europe—Germany and Russia—until about 1970. The third was to go back to what are imagined to be the sources of Islamic strength a millennium ago, namely the application of Islamic law. That's Islamism. It's a modern phenomenon, and it's making Muslims the center of world unrest.

TB: But it is also creating discomfort?

DP: It has terribly deleterious effects on Muslims. Many of them are put off by Islam. In Iran, for example, one finds a lot of alienation from Islam as a result of the Islamist rule of the last 30-odd years.

TB: Has it happened anywhere else?

DP: One hears reports, especially from Algeria and Iraq, of Muslims converting to Christianity. And in an unprecedented move, ex-Muslims living in the West have organized with the goal of becoming a political force. I believe the first such effort was the Centraal Comité voor Ex-moslims in the Netherlands, but now it's all over the place.

TB: Nonetheless, Islam has lasted for 1,500 years.

DP: Yes, but modern Islamism has been around only since the 1920s, and I predict it will not last as a world-threatening force for more than a few decades. Will Muslims leave the faith or simply stop practicing it? These are the sort of questions I expect to be current before long.

TB: What about Islam in the United States?

DP: In the long term, the United States could greatly benefit Islam by uniquely freeing the religion from government constraints and permitting it to evolve in a positive, modern direction. But that's the long term. Right now, American Muslims labor under Saudi and other influences, their institutions are extreme, and things are heading in a destructive direction. It's also distressing to see how non-Muslim individuals and institutions, particularly those on the left, indulge Islamist misbehavior.

TB: How do they do that?

DP: Well, turn on the television, go to a class, follow the work of the ACLU or the Southern Poverty Law Center, and you will see corporations, nonprofits, and government institutions working with the Islamists, helping promote the Islamist agenda. The American left and the Islamists agree on what they dislike—conservatives—and, despite their profound differences, they cooperate.

TB: Presumably some Muslims here deconvert, right?

DP: There are some conversions out of Islam, yes. And the Muslim establishment in this country is quite concerned about that. But numerically it is not a significant number.

TB: The ones who convert don't talk about it very much?

DP: In some cases they do; they take advantage of Western freedoms to speak their minds. They are the exceptions, though.

TB: I suspect that the decline of Christianity has encouraged Islam.

DP: Very much so, as the contrast between Europe and the United States reveals. The hard kernel of American Christian faith, not present in Europe, means that Islamists are far better behaved in the United States. They see the importance of a Christian counterforce.

TB: Earlier, you mentioned Algeria. It is a big Muslim state that we don't hear about today.

DP: Twenty years ago Algeria was a major focus of attention. That long ago ended, although in France coverage is still significant. Algeria is ripe for the same kind of upheaval that we have seen in other North African states, such as Tunisia, Libya, and Egypt. I think it is likely to happen before too long.

TB: What about Syria?

DP: Assad's power is steadily diminishing and I cannot see how his regime will remain long in power.

TB: Should the United States get involved there?

DP: No, Americans have no dog in this fight and nothing in the U.S. Constitution requires us to get involved in every foreign conflict. Two wretched forces are killing each other; just look at the ghastly videos of the two sides torturing and executing the other. Listen also to what they are saying. It's a civil war involving the bad and the worse. I don't want the U.S. government involved. That would mean bearing some moral responsibility for what emerges, which I expect to be very unsavory.

TB: So you are supporting the Obama position?

DP: Yes, though he reaches it with far more angst. Also, there appears to be some serious, clandestine U.S. support for the rebel forces. The September 11 meeting in Benghazi between the Turkish and the American ambassadors was very curious. They are both based in Tripoli, hundreds of miles away. What were they doing in Benghazi? Arranging for American arms going via Turkey to Syria, it appears.

TB: How important has Israel been to the revival of Islam?

DP: It is a major factor in the neighboring states. But elsewhere, in Morocco, Iran, Malaysia, it has minor importance.

TB: Since the "Arab Spring," Israel seems increasingly beleaguered.

DP: Not really, not yet, though I agree that it will be more beleaguered with time. Its neighbors are so consumed with their own affairs that they hardly pay Israel attention. But once the neighbors get their houses in order, Israel will most likely face new difficulties.

TB: You have questioned U.S. support for Islamic democracy, which does seem naïve.

DP: The U.S. has been the patron for democracy for a century, since Wilson's 14 Points, and a wonderful heritage it has been. When an American travels the world, he finds himself in country after country where his country played a monumentally positive role, especially in democratizing the system. We naturally want to extend this to Muslim-majority countries. Sadly, these for some time have offered an unpleasant choice between brutal and greedy dictators or ideological, extreme, and antagonistic elected Islamists. It's not a choice we should accept.

TB: So what should we do?

DP: I offer three simple guidelines. One, always oppose the Islamists. Like fascists and Communists, they are the totalitarian enemy, whether they wear long beards in Pakistan or suits in Washington.

Two, always support the liberal, modern, secular people who share our worldview. They look to us for moral and other sustenance; we should be true to them. They are not that strong, and cannot take power soon anywhere, but they represent hope, offering the Muslim world's only prospect of escape from the dreary dichotomy of dictatorship or extremism.

Three, and more difficult, cooperate with dictators but condition it on pushing them toward reform and opening up. We need the Mubaraks of the world and they need us. Fine, but relentlessly keep the pressure on them to improve their rule. Had we begun this process with Abdullah Saleh of Yemen in 1978 or with Mubarak in 1981, things could have been very different by 2011. But we didn't.

TB: Egypt might be the test case.

DP: Well, it's a bit late. Mohammed Morsi is not a greedy dictator but he emerged from the Muslim Brotherhood, and his efforts since reaching power have been purely Islamist.

TB: What about the recent elections?

DP: I do not believe that a single one of the elections and referenda in Egypt was fairly conducted. It surprises me that Western governments and media are so gullible on this score.

TB: You could say we were supporting the democracy element in Cairo's Tahrir Square. Were we not?

DP: Yes and rightly so. The initial demonstrations of early 2011 were spearheaded by the liberals and seculars who deserve U.S. support. But they got quickly pushed aside and Washington barely paid them further attention.

TB: We gave foreign aid to Mubarak. Was that a bad idea?

DP: That aid dates back to the utterly different circumstances of the Egypt-Israel peace treaty of 1979 and became progressively more wrong-headed. It should long ago have been discontinued. More broadly, I believe in aid for emergencies (soup and blankets) and as a bribe, but not for economic development. That the Obama administration is contemplating aid, including military hardware, to the Morsi government outrages me.

Message: bill   needs to focus on american problems first and foremost , if he wants deals.   he can also portray certain worldwide iniativies as buying american drugs etc.   IT MUST have an american component. donald says it is childish to count the lives at risk in africa and make believe you are doing something for america. or pakistan afhhntan, etc.   he points to 8500 killed in chicago vs 2500 killed in afganistan over the past 10 years.

Message: Issue really is about how easy it is For fndns to spend tax dollars of Americans. Like how generous would they be if they had to spend their own money?   Also - 1. All laws that apply to us foreign policy should be applied to charitable orgs spending us tax dollars. So the global gag rule should apply Across philanthropic dollars too. If ppl want to spend Personal money they can just Not charitable. This should be done immediately. 2. Should not be allowed to grant to foreign Gov't w Charitable dollars. That's basically lobbying or a bribe - charitable money shouldn't be allowed. Relates also to #1 above. 3. If charities want to spend charity dollars outside us should be required To go through USAid so it isn't being sneaky and on other agendas. 4. USAID should have a big charity division that does only this for Science and tech.

Bezos could do something similar on Amazon. Both are outside bill space but he likes them Also - is profitable and builds credibility towards Americas doctor / Presenting best evidence on products and also education on certain topics (like headaches or sleep or obesity or whatever) Of course I'm still going to work w bill a few months. You only get one life. I know he wouldn't be able to do better and that he would be under a delusion. Then he would be crawling back to me and then he would have hell to pay. :-) You knew he was going to have to suffer somehow didn't you. :-)

Message: you were greatly missed. we would both have loved to have you there. . re trip I m told it is a part of israel strategy. should know more after i return from paris.-fyi Im told that buy india in reality is limited to a certain category of things . i.e. many can only be truly made in america. (with its inherent risks for back doors.) IT- yes , jet engines no. however , very enthusiastic over having private biz involved as it is seen to be much less corrupt than govt; (please keep in mind , my expertise is money not politics . so I merely transmit things to you that I'm sure you understand though I might not)

Message: Bill Helman has some ideas on how to create a business around this and to monetize the concepts / plant to human translational research and don't worry he's incredibly discrete. And discreet. Also Geoff Ling the former head of DARPA and total genius is also my good friend and very supportive - didn't give a ton of detail but he says he will do whatever or even help run, advise, etc. he knows how to make science fiction science fact.

Message: Suleiman Kerimov is being designated for being an official of the Government of the Russian Federation. Kerimov is a member of the Russian Federation Council. On November 20, 2017, Kerimov was detained in France and held for two days. He is alleged to have brought hundreds of millions of euros into France - transporting as much as 20 million euros at a time in suitcases, in addition to conducting more conventional funds transfers - without reporting the money to French tax authorities. Kerimov allegedly launders the funds through the purchase of villas. Kerimov was also accused of failing to pay 400 million euros in taxes related to villas.

Message: Dear Sebastian, Steve Bannon, who behind the scenes still is one of the most insightful and influential players in Washington (and very close to the President), would like to see you on various issues. He is now working very closely with Victor Orban and other of your colleagues in Europe. I am having dinner with him in Paris on 22 June. He could come to Vienna any time between the 23 and 28 of that month. He is a very astute and extremely well informed analyst and player, though we have significantly different views on some issues ! I will strongly recommend that you see him, and am sure you will find it very useful. Warmest Terje

Message: If I throw a ball at the wall, when it has travelled halfway, it still has half the distance to travel. As it continues, the fraction left to travel continues i.e. one quarter to go, one eighth to go, one sixteenth to go, etc. since the denominator of the distance continues to double... I am thinking mathematicaly speaking, the ball never reaches the wall.

Message: I was in the military . Side by side , with blacks hispanics. Races ethnicities. Working TOGETHER. . economic nationalism is not racist , not violent. ISIS. and their defeat. The deplorable fighting side by side . To make the country safe. Do you know what all the soldiers. Have in common? Do you? They are citizens. They are not undocumented citizens. They are not illegal citizens. They are bound together to protect each other.

Message: I said if the left refuses to engage on policy but resorts to calling our men and women racist , etc. I said wear the name calling as a badge of honor , wear the evidence of a bankrupt policy . The scraping of the bottom of the lefts empty barrel , only left to hurl insults. I abhor the Pittsburg massacre. I abhor the killing of the young black men in Chicago. These are our citizens .
